

Homeopathic Long-Term Therapy and the Importance of Disposition and Lifestyle

In his main works Hahnemann denominated the „Totality of Signs and Symbols“ as the main criterion for determining a remedy, also in the case of chronic diseases (cf. Organon 6, § 22). He referred to symptoms and signs which, according to the patient’s view, had been developed through infection with venereal diseases (Syphosis and Syphilis) or with non-venereal psora. It was only later that authors defined inherited disease symptoms and signs. Since the beginning of the 20th century, these symptoms have been described as „constitution“. At the end of the 20th century, they have become known as hereditary or patrimonial miasmas in homeopathic literature.

Which role does constitutive thinking or the postulate of an inherited or acquired miasma play in the choice of a homeopathic remedy? How are different concepts of long-term treatment of chronic diseases put into practice? What are the criteria for a change of the remedy? What are the terms and definitions we can agree upon today in order to understand different approaches?

We will use relevant long-term cases to discuss these questions at the ICE 16. Simultaneous translation German-English and English-German will be provided in the Johann-Sebastian-Bach-Saal in the convention centre Schloss Köthen.
